Buzzing

Terence Tao · 12 February 2010

https://terrytao.wordpress.com/2010/02/12/buzzing/

tao2typ · converted to Typst 2026-10-14 (UTC)

As an experiment, I've recently started using Google Buzz as an outlet for various things I wanted to say or share, but which were too insubstantial to merit a mention on this blog. (In turn, one of the reasons of starting this blog was to share various bits of mathematics which were too insubstantial for a published paper. Presumably the process becomes degenerate if iterated any further…) I don't know how frequently I will be updating, though.

Comments (3)

luckytoilet · 12 February 2010

That's interesting; but don't you have to add someone in order to read their posts on Buzz?

luckywhat? · 13 February 2010

No. Google adds your top contacts automatically to Buzz. Its really annoying and not so easy to disable. You have to actively 'block' people that were added, potentially hurting their feelings… :(

Career advice from the Fields medalists and some other mathematicians « Successful Researcher · 17 February 2010

[…] 3: a recent interview with Terence Tao, his Google buzz page and his post on […]