What's new

Setting things up...

Terence Tao · 22 February 2007

https://terrytao.wordpress.com/2007/02/22/setting-things-up/

tao2typ · converted to Typst 2026-10-14 (UTC)

For over eight years (1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007) I've manually set up a "What's new" web page off of my home page to list various research updates and other sundry news items. As an experiment, I've decided to move this page to a blog, to try out the various content management tools and make it a little easier to get feedback on things.

It may well be that this page will eventually evolve into a true blog, with external links, commentary, opinion pieces, and so forth, though this probably would require more time and attention than I actually have available. For now, though, its primary (and rather pedestrian) purpose is the same as with the old incarnation of this page: to announce and describe any new research papers, expository papers, or related material that I have.

(Update, Feb 25) Moved over to wordpress, due to better LaTeX support.

Comments (5)

Terry Tao is now blogging « Perfectly Reasonable Deviations · 28 February 2007

[…] reasons why Terry started blogging in wordpress is that wordpress now allows embedding (more info here). Welcome to the blogosphere […]

Book version of the blog « What's new · 25 January 2008

[…] January, 2008 in admin, book Tags: announcement, meta It's now been almost a year since I moved my "What's new?" page from my home page to this blog. Since then, […]

New Year's To-Do List « Learning Computation · 30 April 2010

[…] and convert this blog to WordPress. After all, if it's good enough for Terry Tao's What's New, Scott Aaronson's Shtetl-Optimized, Tyler DiPietro's PowerUp, and Foxy's […]

AD · 26 January 2011

It looks like the texts from the earlier years are gone.

Jérémy · 20 November 2016

No longer working :/